Sophia practices civil litigation with an emphasis on insurance defence and is focused on personal injury and accident benefits. Prior to joining McCague Borlack, Sophia worked in the area of personal injury for a Plaintiff litigation firm which provided her with insight into both sides of a litigation case.

Also working at the Department of Justice, with Health Canada on their litigation team, Sophia handled many research projects, and drafted memoranda of law on Charter challenges. Her articles at a boutique law firm gained her an overview of many aspects of general practice including civil litigation and corporate law. She is considered an excellent communicator, which has contributed to her skills in building great client relationships.

Sophia was first licensed to practice law in 2010 in the State of Michigan. Then in 2012, she was called to the Ontario Bar in 2012, and in 2016, obtained her license for New York. Sophia is bilingual; fluent in French and English.

While attending Law School, Sophia participated in the All-School Moot Court Competition where she ranked 8 out of 100 students and went on to represent Michigan State University in the National Trial Advocacy Competition where she further honed her courtroom and advocacy skills. As a student instructor, Sophia taught concepts of Criminal and Constitutional Law to high school seniors.

Summer, being her favourite season, is when she can relax with family at the cottage and enjoy fishing, kayaking, or reading a good book--likely a true crime story.
